Albert and Alberta Go to Washington

by Mark Damohn

Albert and Alberta Go to Washington is a children's book that took place in the nation's capital. The story follows the adventures of Albert and Alberta, two characters who visit Washington, D.C. for the first time. The book is written by Mark Damohn and published by Mascot Books.

The story begins with Albert and Alberta, who are known for their fresh and nutritious meal choices, traveling east from Canada to visit the nation's capital. They begin their journey by visiting the Mount Albert Edward hike, which offers stunning views of the surrounding landscapes.

As they explore Washington, D.C., Albert and Alberta encounter various interesting sights and people. They visit the National Museum of American History, where they learn about the history of the United States. They also visit the National Gallery of Art and the Smithsonian Institution, which house some of the world's finest art collections.

Albert and Alberta also experience the city's vibrant cultural scene, attending concerts and performances. They visit the Kennedy Center, which is home to the National Symphony Orchestra and the Washington National Opera. They also attend a tango and jazz concert at the Alberta Rose Theatre.

Throughout their visit, Albert and Alberta meet new friends and learn about the diverse culture of Washington, D.C. They enjoy the city's food, from the famous D.C. pastries to the variety of international cuisines.

At the end of their visit, Albert and Alberta return to Canada, enriched by their experiences and eager to share their stories with others.

Albert and Alberta Go to Washington is a delightful and educational book for young readers, combining fiction with factual information about the history and culture of Washington, D.C.