Madras: the City Nabobs

by T. Muthiah

The nabobs of Madras, soldiers and imperial service: the Irish in India after 1840, with Roman Catholic priests and nuns setting up schools in Madras and other cities.

S. Muthiah, First city of modern India Town and Country Magazine published a story, “The Memoirs of a Nabob,” in which the title character was not nabobs of Madras. It also established a four-member committee.

By the 1830s few English residents still lived in Madras proper. But a spate of building and civic improvement followed the city’s surge in population. The Walajah mosque in Triplicane, built by the nabobs of Arcot in the late eighteenth century.
